FIRE & SECURITY SOLUTIONS

Providing the best solutions for thermal imaging and video analytics.

“The current COVID-19 crisis has highlighted the essential role of the security and safety sectors”

The COVID-19 virus has presented a huge global challenge and a race to innovate solutions or adapt existing technologies to mitigate the spread of the virus.

Infrared or thermal imaging is currently being highlighted for its suitability to protect essential workers by measuring body temperature and indicating potential victims of the virus.

Thermal imaging cameras can detect even slight changes in skin temperature and automated systems using thermal cameras for non-contact skin temperature measurement could safely be used to indicate a fever or underlying infection.

Video analytics could be deployed to provide a real-time automated detection system, alerting when an abnormal temperature reading is detected.

Importantly these technologies can be used to detect elevated body temperatures and symptoms but not specifically the COVID-19 virus itself. This can be helpful for screening but it cannot provide an actual diagnosis. COVID-19 also has a relatively long incubation period and not all sufferers will display elevated temperatures.

However, thermal imaging solutions could still be one of many valuable tools in slowing or preventing the spread of the virus through early detection.
